

Dear team,

Today, on Anzac Day, we remember and honour the extraordinary sacrifice and courage of all those who served in the Australian and New Zealand armed forces. It is a day where we reflect on the freedom of our country brought about by the brave service of our Anzacs as well as other service men and women who have supported our nation. Their resilience, camaraderie, integrity and unwavering dedication to each other and their country continue to inspire us, as we know their service and suffering helped make Australia what it is today.

In particular I would like to acknowledge the important contributions of health workers during times of war. From Gallipoli to modern day deployments, health workers have been at the heart of care - providing comfort, expertise and humanity in extremely challenging conditions.

We are proud to work alongside veterans within our Metro North workforce, who have served with distinction out of respect for our wonderful and privileged nation. These people bring unique skills and experiences to their work in Metro North and remind us of the honourable nature of the work we perform each day in the service of our community.

This morning there will be an Anzac Day service held in TPCH Multi-Faith Centre, ground floor, Main Acute Building at 10.45am. In addition, the Last Post will be played at TPCH this morning at 9am, followed by one minute silence.

Please take a moment today to reflect on the selfless contribution of the Anzacs and how their significant service and sacrifice allowed us to have the many freedoms we all enjoy today.

Lest we forget.

Regards,
